

Retrieval-Augmented Generation

Retrieval augmented generation grounds language model answers in retrieved documents rather than parametric memory. A retriever selects passages from a corpus; the generator conditions on them.

Chunking splits documents before embedding. Chunk size trades recall against precision. Overlap preserves context across boundaries.

Evaluation

Retrieval quality is measured separately from generation quality.